1. Neither the U.S. nor the world has an acceptable program to deal with the threat of further proliferation of nuclear weapons.

2. The U.S. policy of "preemptive military action" leading to "regime change" is unacceptable.

3. One or more of the five declared nuclear powers (U.S., Britain, France, China, Russia) should propose to the U.N. Security Council and the Security Council should resolve that:

   A. All nations now possessing nuclear weapons will state the type and number of weapons they possess.

   B. No nation not now possessing nuclear weapons will be allowed to acquire them.

   C. Nations now possessing nuclear weapons will present to the Security Council a program to sharply reduce their number over a period of several years, leading eventually to their elimination.

   D. When necessary (e.g., in the case of Israel or North Korea) security guarantees will be given to nations giving up nuclear weapons.

   E. Evidence of failure of any nation to adhere to the Security Council resolution will lead to the introduction of inspectors for such period of time - indefinitely if necessary - as to erase doubts.

   F. Clear violation of the Security Council resolutions will result in the authorized use of conventional military force to achieve compliance.
